IRA/ROTH IRA Recharacterizations

- A. Roth IRA contributions can be recharacterized as Traditional IRA contributions up until the extended tax-filing deadline for the tax year for which the Roth IRA contribution was made. The amount of the contribution plus earnings (or minus losses), if any, will be distributed from the account as a “Recharacterized IRA Contribution” and invested in a Traditional IRA as a “Recharacterized Contribution.” (Use the Roth IRA option on the Recharacterization Request form).
- B. Traditional IRA contributions can be recharacterized as Roth IRA contributions up until the extended tax-filing deadline for the year for which the Traditional IRA contribution was made. The amount of the contribution plus earnings (or minus losses), if any, will be distributed from the account as a “Recharacterized IRA Contribution” and invested in a Roth IRA as a “Recharacterized Contribution.” (Use the Traditional IRA option on the Recharacterization Request form).

EXAMPLE OF RECHARACTERIZING A CONTRIBUTION

On June 13th, Matt makes a contribution of $3,000 to his Traditional IRA. On March 1st of the following year, Matt, realizing that he will not be able to deduct his IRA contribution, which is now worth $3,100, decides to recharacterize this contribution as a Roth IRA contribution.

Matt completes the Traditional IRA option in Section 2 of the Recharacterization Request form.

Tax Reporting for the above example:

- A Form 5498 would be generated from the Traditional IRA to report the IRA contribution of $3,000 for the applicable tax year.
- A Form 1099-R would be generated from the Traditional IRA to report the $3,100 “prior year recharacterization” for the year in which the recharacterization was completed.
- A Form 5498 would be generated from the Roth IRA to report the $3,100 “recharacterized” contribution for the year in which the recharacterization was completed.
